members of both political parties. We have not. The condition of things at that time, was very the people, is not a Whig doctrine.

MR. WEBSTER'S SPEECH, [Continued.1]

When the bill had passed the two Houses, the President, as we all know, asked the opinion of his cabinet upon its constitutionality. The Secretary of State and the Attorney General were against it; the Secretary of the Treisury was in favor? H; and among the grounds on which he placed the right of Congress to pass the law, was its adaptation to the exercise of the had not a grinea in his pocket _ commercial power conferred by the Constitution on Congress. His language is: "The institution of a bank has, also, a natural relation to the regulation of trade between the States, in so far ent medium of exchange between them, and to the keeping up a full circulation, by preventing the bequent displacement of the metals in teciprocal remittances. Money is the very hinge on which commerce turns. And this does not a mean merely gold and silver, many other things have sured the purpose, with different degrees. of utility. Paper has been extensively employed. - It cannot, therefore, be admitted, with the Attorney General that the regulation of trade between the States, as it concerns the medium of circulation and exchange, ought to be considered as confined to coin." "As it is," he adds, Win refe rones to these general relations at commerce, that an establishment which farmshes facilities to circulation, and a convenient medium of exchange and alienation, is to be regarded as a regulation of trade.

Hie first bank, regarded it as a fit and necessary measure, in order to enable Congress to exercise its important duty of regulating commerce, and to fulfil, especially that pare of the duty which enjoined upon it the provision of a proper

... That the establishing of a bank will be very conductive to the successful conducting of the hutional finances; and will tend to give facility to the obtaining of loans for the use of the Gov erament in sudden emergencies; and will be productive of considerable advantage to trade and industry in general." Trade and industry in general, therefore; conwithed one distinct and definite object of the incorporation, if the law truly expounds its own a. It was not revenue duues alone, H Wat not the facility of making loans merely, it was not mere utility to Government, but in ad-Ligh to these, it was commerce, it was the interest of the People, it was trade and business in general, which, among other considerations, formed an important part of the objects of the incamporation. And indeed, sir, events proved that man.vastly the most important part of all AV hat clee did not the first bank do, for the Gov, tinment or the country, at all to be compared, in the amount of benefit, to its influence on the Marience and the exchanges?

The banks, or most of them, hid suspended payments. Their paper was depreciated in varoundegrees; the exchanges were all disordered; and the commerce of the country thrown into confusion. Government and People were all rich; but, with all their riches, they had no meacy. - Both might apply to themselves what Addison, being a much readier writer then speaker, said of himself, when he observed that although he could draw for a thousand pounds.

> - Mr. Madison, at that time, was President of the United States. He bad been one of the opposers of the first bank, on constitutional grounds, but he had yielded his own opinions to the general annthment of the amount, and to the consideration that the power had been established and exercised. He was not a man who carried his respect for himself, and his own opinions, so far as to overcome his respect for all othermen's judgments. Wise men, sir, are sometimes wise enough to surrender their own apprions, unat least to see that there is a time then questions must be considered as settled. Mr. Madison was one of these. In his annual Message in December, 1815, he says:

"The arrangements of the finances, with a view to the receipts and expenditures of a permoment peace establishment, will necessarily enter firto the deliberations of Congress during the present session. It is true, that the improv ed condition of the public revenue will not only afford the means of maintaining the faith of the Government with its creditors inviolite, and of Nothing can be plainer, sir, than this lan- prosecuting successfully the measures of the guage; and therefore nothing is more certain most appear policy, not will flow justify and the than that those who recommended and supported incluste alleviation of the burdens imposed by the necessities of the war. The preamble tells us. It duce this result, the probable operation of a national bank will merit consideration; and it neither of these expedients be deemed effectual, it may become necessary to ascellain the terms apon which the notes of the Government (no onger required as an instrument of credit) shall be issued, upon motives of general policy, as a common medium of circulation. Here, sir. is the express recommendation to Congress to provide a "National Currency," a paper currency, a uniform currency, for the uses of the community, as a substitute for the precings metats, and as a medium of exchange. It devolves on Congress, says Mr Madison to provide such a substitute as shall engage the onlidence and accommodate the wants of the citizens throughout the Union; and if the State banks cannot produce this result, a national bank will merit consideration. Can language be more explicit? Currency national curren cy, currency for exchange, currency which shall accommodate all the People, is the great and leading, and, I may add, the sole and single ob-

Why, sir, the House of Representatives resolved "that so much of the President's Me-sage as soluted to a uniform national Arrency should be sclerred to a select committee. > "hird of the liverality by which some of them are actuated in their intercourse with the Treasury, justice requires an explicit acknowledgment. It is a fact, however, incontestably proved, that those institutions cannot, at this time be successfully employed to turnish a uniform national currency. The failure of one attempt -to- assuciate them, with that view, has already been stated. Another attempt, by their agency-in circulating Treasury notes, to overcome the inequalities of the exchanges, has only been par tially successful. And a plan recently proposed with the design to curtail the issues of bank notes, to fix the public confidence in the administration of the affairs of the banks, and to give toreach hank a legitimate share in the circulation, is not likely to receive the general saucrion of the banks. The truth is that the charter restrictions of some of the banks, the mutual relation and dependence of the banks of the same State, and even of the banks of the differ ent States, and the duty which the directors of even pank conceive they one or their tunnediate constituents, upon points of security or emolument, interpose an insoperable obstacle to any voluntary arrangement, upon national consider ations alone, for the establishment of a national medium through the agency of the State banks

"The power of the Government to supply and maintain a paper medium of exchange will not be questioned; but for the introduction of that medium, there must be an adequate motive."

"Upon the whole, the state of the national currency, and other important considentellate connected with the operations of the Trasury, render it a duty respectfully be propose. "That a notional Bank be established."

This language, it must be admitted, is explicit enough, both in regard to the power and the duty; and the whole report hears very little resemblance, most certainly, to the official paper from the Treasury Department, now before us.

When the bill was colled up, the honorable member from South Carolina explained its objects in an able speech. He showed the absolate accessity of a national currency; the power of Congress over such currency, whether metallic or paper; and the propriety and expediency of establishing a bank, as the best means for exercising these powers and fulfilling these duties. I agreed then, and I agree now, to the general sentiments expressed in that speech ieaitily and entirely. I would refer to it on this occasion, both as an able argument and a high authority; and beg to adopt it, as setting forth, in a strong light, the sendinents which I am now endeavoring to enforce.

IMr. Calhoun here rose to make an explana ion. He said that he never saw the reporter's notes on his speech on that occasion, and the tofore what he did say, may not have been what he would have said. There were weints of consission in that speech which occupied a col-Mr. C. said, that he took care, then, as now, to fortify himself, and leave a road open to oppose, at any coming time, a national bank. Il. then said that he was approved to a bank, but that he submitted to the incessity of the case. There was then a connexion between the Government and the liquids; and if the Government had a right to regulate the currency, there was no means of downe it but by a mational bank. He had, both then and since then, contended that Government had no right to have any connexion with any banks: In his own opinion, the United States Bank (which he then, advocated and assisted to establish) was not established according to the Constitution. Congress had no right to establish such a heart. He seted

It appears that Mr. Kendall left the Post Ofice on the evening of Sunday last, at a late hour, and on reaching his own house, felt some inward impulse! prompting him to return to the office. He obeyed its admonition, and immediately-retraced his steps, until he-found-himself again at the portals of the "enchanted place What was his astonishment on opening and en tering his own rooms to find himself enveloped in a dense mass of smoke. MISSISSIPPI POLITICS.

The reception in Mississippi of the news, that Gholson and Claiborne intended to hold their seats during the whole of the 25th Congress, has, as we anticipated, produced no inconsidera ble excitement.
